About

I am passionate about art and always have been. I love creating short videos on iMovie, crafting art projects, and painting and drawing in my personal journals. After my eighth grade graduation, I saved up and bought my first DSLR camera and subsequently took photography classes in high school to explore this genre. This is how I found my passion for photography and I knew that it would be my profession. Combining my interests outside of art into my photography made me fall in love with it even more. Inspired by watching Marvel superhero movies, I loved the idea of telling a story through art and this encouraged me to do the same through my photography.

During three years of studying art in high school, I concentrated on taking photos of nature and moments in time rather than trying to create an image that is a false reality. Emotionally impacting those who see my work gives me pride and joy in what I create. Candidly capturing a moment in time where the subject does not know someone is watching so you can capture an emotion, is another area I have focused on. Now pursuing a career in photography through my college courses, I push myself out of my comfort zone and photographed people inside of a studio with artificial lighting. I continue to learn and grow by trying different types of photography like sports, architecture, and animal portraits. My goal is to become well-rounded and diverse in my field.
